dian officers in 1871. Cricket, a development of "Cat and dog," like Baseball which is only an improvement on our fine, old-fashioned game.

Football practiced by Greek and Roman. Both sexes used to play. Cricket of French origin, as name clearly denotes introduced into England by a play—more scientific than billiards, for the latter is a game of chance.

Boxing wasking of all games, for here the sportsman runs his himself; hence no cheating as in other sports.

In conclusion the lecturer advocated the following training by young people, inspired to personal health and national greatness of all manly exercises; they prepare the mind and develop the muscles of both sexes without which effeminacy, and the loss of manly character, and of hearts and endurance in course of time the finest natures, as the proverbial drooping away are the hardest stone.

THE LA PLATENSE CO.
Estancia Media Agua,
May 2, 1889.
To the Editor of the Standard.

Dear Sir,

I travelled per Platense Co.'s steamer Venus from Buenos Ayres to Boca Yaguari last Tuesday, and wish to state that the fares are high and the treatment and attendance of the worst. My wife accompanied me. We were given a cabin large enough, but containing an iron chest which was so close to the ceiling that the smoke from the stove was so full of noise I wonder it did not burst. The cabins have electric lamps, and also a candle. Up to dinner time the electric lamp gave no sign. So we lighted the candle. After dinner my wife, who cannot bear tobacco smoking, said she would like to read in the saloon before dining-room, while smoking is prohibited. We went there and found it lighted by three candles. I rang the electric bell result. Then I caught a passing waiter and asked when the electric light would be turned on. He said it was not his business, and that it was not lighted unless there was a crowd of passengers, and that I had better speak to the Captain. This I did not do; so we retired to my cabin to try and get the light of the candles. Not long after the candle gave less light than a good match. When the whistle sounded for change of steamers at Yaguri the candle was burned out. I rang the electric bell for about ten minutes, but got no answer; so had to go and get a waiter to look for my cabin waiter to get me a candle.

The whole length of the passage outside the upper deck cabins had only one light on each side from one end of the ship to the other. Add to this, very indifferent food and abominable table wines. I think that thirteen gold dollars for a "nominal" twelve-hour trip by steamers belonging to part, I prefer less gilding and more solid comfort.

In haste,
Yours very truly,
Samuel Abercrombie,

THE BRITISH HOSPITAL,
Buenos Ayres, 9th May 1880.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

Dear Sir,

The attention of the Committee of management of the British Hospital having been drawn to a letter on the above subject, appearing in your issue of yesterday under the initial "J.," I have been requested to point out that such communication should have been sent direct to the Committee by your correspondent and not anonymously to the Public Press.

If you will kindly place me in communication with some representative "J.," shall be happy to offer him a satisfactory explanation—having received a full report on the matter from the Resident Medical Officer.

You will confer a great favor on the British Hospital if, in future cases, you will kindly refer complainants direct to the Committee, who will happily to give full attention and explanation in each case. Should the explanations of the Committee not prove to be satisfactory to you, it is always open for them to then ventilate their cases by means of the Public Press.

I am, Dear Sir,
Yours truly
J. R. Stafford,
Hon. Sec.
